A healthy dosage of respect in friendships arises from understanding and appreciating the fine-tuned balance and interplay between friends respecting your independence and personal space as an individual and cherishing your interdependence where you need and rely on each other.

— Duncan Muguku
Genuine friendships do not exist in a sterile, antiseptic and germ free environment. There would be situations where germs are transmitted in the form of disagreements, disappointments and other forms of heartaches which are normal in any human relationship.

— Duncan Muguku
When you emerge through disagreements, it actually strengthens the friendship bonds because you learn more about one another and emerge more mature and enlightened from the experience.

— Duncan Muguku
